The differences between middle school and high school: there is so much more for a student to know and to remember in high school.

- We treat them like young adults. The student is held to a higher standard of responsibility for being a student.
 - A. They have to know what cycle day it is—they must use the Deerfield Planner. They must know what the schedule is each day
 - B. They have to read their DHS email every day so that when staff email them, they are aware of what is being asked of them. They have to be in the know
 - C. There is more work and it is more intense and more involved than in middle school AND IT ALL COUNTS
 - D. They to have their materials for class each day. Things cannot be left at home, especially their new Chromebook or their fully charged INSPIRE Calculator. No excuses are accepted for not being ready for class. Actually, we would prefer no excuses at all
 - E. They have to check their teacher websites for homework assignments and calendars. They should check Infinite Campus at least once a week to make sure all of their work is turned in and check their grades.
 - F. There is a greater reliance on technology: Google docs et al, Turnitin.com, Web assign, Infinite Campus, Naviance

Some teachers have late policies where they take points off of assignments that are not turned in on time. Some teachers don't accept late work at all. Some teachers only accept late work until the unit test. It is always best to get work turned in on the due date.

- G. Students can carry their backpacks with them, but they need to avoid having the backpacks get too heavy. They must make strategic use of their lockers throughout the school day
- H. At DHS, students have to buy all of their books, their INSPIRE Calculator and their Chromebook. They need to bring those books and the computer and the calculator to class when the teacher expects them to have it. Students will also buy their paperback novels for English, which are best purchased at our DHS bookstore

- I. There is a cafeteria with hot lunch and items for purchase. We also have outside vendors sometimes. The students need to manage many more food choices, and not all of them are healthy. And there are vending machines and pizza sold quite often after school.
- J. The student must look on their teachers' websites for assignments when they miss class and then email his/her teachers if they need clarification or assistance with the assignment. It is always good for the student to let the teacher know that they are taking these steps and just check in after an absence. And parents need to call the attendance office that same day to authorize the absence.
- K. The student has to approach his/her teachers if they need assistance. The student will need to initiate the appointment (s)
- L. The student must be thorough in his/her homework completion, even if it doesn't count towards their grade
- M. The student must be aware and follow teacher direction more closely like when and where to turn in homework. Some teachers are now using Turnitin.com and others want things emailed to them. There are quite a variety of ways now for work to be turned in
- N. Students need to be prepared for quizzes at all times. The use of Quizlet and Web Assign is vital
- O. Students must carry their ID card at all times, especially if money is placed on the card for food purchases
- P. It sounds funny, but closing their locker and remembering their locker combinations are a must
- Q. Students must keep track of their stuff like books, calculators, I pods and I phones. If you can etch their name into the device as an identifier, that is ideal
- P. We offer so many more activities, clubs and sports. There is so much to do besides studying. That is the good news. The bad news is there is so much to do and it is important to balance one's time and energy and stay focused on doing well academically.
- Q. There is much more of a time commitment to activities like sports or rehearsals with practices six days a week for 2.5 hours a day

- Learning the difference between doing homework and studying: probably 15 minutes of reviewing the material for each class, each day would be sufficient

Ways to help freshmen get more comfortable at DHS

- Attending Summer School
- Attending sports camps this summer/summer work outs like for Cross Country
- Joining Fall sports and/or activities and clubs
- Freshman orientation-for students only
- Walking their schedule in August before school starts
- Advisory Class: four days a week with an Advisory teacher and two Senior Advisors: The primary purpose for this class, at least first quarter, is to smooth the students' transition into high school
- Homeroom: four days a week with the same homeroom for four years: The primary purpose is to give students another adult in the building that they can access as a resource and to help build relationships among the students in a smaller group setting
- Trying out clubs and activities

Ways for Parents to become more comfortable with the high school

- Attending the Freshman Parent Orientation evening in August (Warrior Welcome)
- Attending the Freshman Morning parent program offered each quarter
- Social workers offer one evening program in the fall for parents of freshmen to come together to talk about the freshman year experience and hopefully relieve some parents' anxiety
- Attending PTO lunches with the principal-Audris Griffith. Be in the know!
- Introduce yourself via an email or a phone call to your child's counselor. Let that person know that you are eager to form a partnership to help your child be successful in high school. With a relationship formed, you and the counselor will be able to share concerns more easily. Please don't do this on the first day of school or the first week of school.
- Help your child navigate the increased demands of high school-in many ways, even though it will be August and they are officially in high school, they still don't have all of the skills yet to manage all of the demands of high school. The counselor, the advisory teacher, all freshmen homeroom teachers and all freshman teachers will help as well. Your child may still need your help to get and stay organized, but they don't need help with their homework.
- Watch the DHS website often for information and updates
- Reach out to parents of upper classman for their perspectives (knowing that what you receive is just one perspective and may not be best for your child)
- Become familiar with and use Infinite Campus

- Help your child strike a balance between academics and activities. Sometimes, they are so excited for a fresh start and they join too much and can't get all of the work done.
- Follow the acronym JAR
 - A. Join: Join the PTO, join the Friends of the Arts and the Booster Club and especially join the Deerfield Parent Network. Get involved yourself, as that will allow you to meet other parents, network and know what is going on within school and within the community. You absolutely need to "be in the know"
 - B. Attend the programs that those organizations sponsor, attend Warrior Welcome, our parent orientation evening and the Freshman AM parent programs, attend Audris' lunches, attend the sporting events, the concerts, the theater shows, parent night. Attend sporting events and performances sponsored by the high school even if your child is not participating in the event. Try to get to as many presentations as we offer for parents. Be very much a part of the DHS community. Be as active as your kids are.
 - C. Read: Read the announcements that are emailed to you twice a week, read all of the messenger messages from Infinite Campus, get a subscription and read Deerprints, our school newspaper, read the website under the parent section as there are newsletters there and updates from the school, look under quick links for great information such as the Program of Studies

And then there is L for listen and Q for asking questions. Who would have guessed that minivans were the best things ever invented after sliced bread. Carpools are still the very best way to hear what is being thought about and said. So just listen

You will also need to think about if you are comfortable if upperclassmen will be driving your child, usually from events. You don't always know them personally, but it tends to be very convenient. There might other considerations to think about. Ask questions.

I say Q for asking questions because there is lots of information that floats around the community. Not all of it is true and not all of it is right for your child. Ask questions of school personnel like the counselor, the sponsor or coach, the advisory teacher or homeroom teacher or go to directly to the teachers themselves; of course let your student get the information first.

There is even a way now for the students' grandparents to be involved as we now have a Grandparents program where we invite them twice a year to come to DHS to learn more about the school and give them suggestions on how to stay connected to their grandchildren while they are at DHS.

Mythbusters, tips and tricks

- No one gets sold an elevator pass or shoved into a locker. We pride ourselves on taking good care of all of our students, but especially our freshman.
- The building is not that big. Students find their way around rather quickly. It is the parents who get lost.
- The student will figure out our cycle schedule very quickly and also figure out how to manage their homework load with two classes taken out of the mix each day. It is the parents who have a hard time figuring out the daily schedule
- Freshmen will probably stick closely to the friends they left middle school with and spent the summer with, but usually by the start of second semester of their freshman year, they begin to make many more new friends and their circle of friends widens.
- Not everyone drinks. There are plenty of students who have no interest in drinking.

Tips and tricks:

- Say “no” when something does not sound right to you. It is ok to say no. No to spring break in Mexico. No to a limo for homecoming. No to boy/girl sleepovers, if that makes you uncomfortable.
- Don’t host a large party! You certainly can host pictures ahead of homecoming for example, but no other large gatherings. It will not be worth it. But having said that, it is great to host small or informal or impromptu gatherings as this will help you to get to know your child’s friends. And it gives you a golden opportunity to listen in when you casually (and often) bring in the treats for those hungry teenagers!
- Network with other parents. Call to find out if they will be home AND watching what is happening at their house. Don’t expect your child to know this information.
- Ask for access to their Facebook page. Follow them on Twitter. Monitor Infinite Campus. You need to be active and aware of what is happening with them as much as possible.
- Be the one to offer to carpool or drive. You will learn so much through the kids’ conversation-unless they are texting each other and there is silence in the vehicle.
- Look for the ISBN numbers for books on the DHS website. Buying used books will save you quite a bit of money
- Buy a second set of books to keep at home
- Think about how often you will drop off “stuff” your child forgot at home: I hope almost never. Students need to be responsible for bringing everything they need to school every day. They must learn this skill and not rely on you each time they forgot to bring something. You don’t want to keep running stuff into school all of the time
- Look ahead to traffic safety since no freshmen can take it at DHS-figure out when your student will take the course and if it will be at the high school or done privately
- Watch Infinite Campus for grades and assignments being turned in-maybe once a week-not much more than that

- On Infinite Campus, you can see what your child is purchasing in the cafeteria. You may or may not want to see this?
- Don't be afraid to call or email teachers for information, but have your child speak with the teacher first
- Allow your child to take on more responsibility like getting themselves out of bed in the morning, making their own lunch, doing their own laundry, managing their daily schedule etc. They need to become more independent and they need to become better problem solvers. They need to learn to think fast on their feet.
- Don't text with your child during the school day unless you just created a doctor's appointment and they really need to know that they must leave school early. You might get all worked up over something that your child said to you, but by the time they got home, it was all resolved and no big deal.
- Don't take them out of school for doctors' appointments or orthodontist appointments or vacations, if there is any way to avoid it. Missing hours of instruction is detrimental. It adds to the student's stress.
- Unless the student is really sick, they need to be in school. We have a wonderful nurse so if the student gets sick during the day, the student sees her first and then she would call you if she thinks a student should go home. Students must check out through the health service if they are ill and need to go home. They can't just text you to come get them. And don't fall for the old line "nothing is happening in school today"
- Don't call them out of classes or authorize an absence on the premise that "it's not that important". PE is just as important as Math.

My very best advice: Enjoy your child's time in high school. Don't wish it away. Get to everything you can. In a few short years, they will be gone and off doing their own thing. Enjoy every moment with them!
